

To Whom It May Concern:

In 2012 my wife lost her five-year battle with cancer. A few days later her mother and brother filed a civil suit against me. They wanted my wife's estate. They wanted to have me arrested. They wanted to do everything they could to make my life even more miserable than it already was.

My wife and I shared a home with her mother. And, after my wife died, I was not allowed to go there. Every time I tried to go to my house, the police were called and I was forced to leave.

I had never had any trouble with my wife's family or the police. And now my wife was dead; I could not live in my home, the police were being manipulated against me, and I had to deal with a lawsuit.

This all came as quite a shock. I felt like I had been run over by a bus. All of these injustices were being thrust upon me, and I had to find some way to defend myself.

Thankfully, I have very good friends. They knew the allegations against me were untrue. And they started working to find an attorney to represent me.

Weeks passed, and none of the referrals panned out. Then, a good friend told me to "call Kenneth Drake". That was one of the best phone calls I ever made. I was in a terrible emotional state (a wreck) when I spoke to Ken. He was compassionate and calm. He dealt with me on a very personal level. For me, he became more than just an experienced lawyer. He was a counselor, he was concerned about how I was feeling, He didn't have to, but he did a lot to help me through the grieving process that followed my wife's death. It became immediately apparent that I had found a strong and loving person. I had found a man of high moral standards, a man who had my back.

My legal matter lasted for many, many, months. It was daunting. It was emotional. It was beating me down. But, Ken was always there to keep me focused. He encouraged me when I just wanted to give up and walk away. He believed in the rule of law and wanted justice for me. He wanted to resolve my legal problems so I could move on with my life.

Thanks to Ken that day finally came. Ken resolved my legal problems. All the allegations against me were dismissed. And, yes I received a cash settlement that has allowed me to move on with my life.

The best advice I can give anyone dealing with an unpleasant legal matter is, "call Kenneth Drake".

Sincerely,

H.R
